

Response to the Non-Criminal Barricade: Disengagement & Special Relationships®

8 Hours

Learn when to disengage, when to stay, and your state's duty and liability laws

This course teaches law enforcement officers and supervisors the best way to respond to mentally ill persons who are armed, barricaded, and in crisis.

Students will leave with an understanding of modern disengagement and re-engagement tactics, specific ways to avoid liability, and a collection of the best non-criminal barricade policies from police agencies around the country.

Most police agencies are searching for de-escalation training for law enforcement. Instead of vague philosophical notions about de-escalation, this course presents specific guidance that your officers can use immediately.

Each student will receive:

- ✓ An understanding of your state's laws regarding the public duty doctrine, special relationships, liability, and duty
- ✓ A decision-making cheat sheet for disengagement
- ✓ Policies, a police report template, and a script to use to sever special relationships

"Savage Training Group does a great job of explaining the legal, moral, and policy obligations that officers face in a non-criminal barricade incident. They provide a framework for response/disengagement/re-engagement that can work for any agency, regardless of size."

— Sgt. Evan Wells, Melbourne PD (FL)

To see our current schedule, host a course, or have us present private training
just for your agency, visit
SavageTrainingGroup.com

Our Expert Instructors:

Scott Savage is a recognized expert in the response to non-criminal barricades. He is an experienced law enforcement officer who has not only commanded these types of incidents on duty, but also trains officers across the country how to do the same.

Donald Anderson, an active-duty Lieutenant with the San Francisco Police Department, is an experienced law enforcement professional who regularly responds to critical incidents, including barricade subjects, as a Team Leader on the department's Crisis Negotiation Team.

John Morris recently retired as a Lieutenant from the Winston-Salem Police Department (NC) with many years in SWAT and Patrol and Special Operations. He holds a National Instructor Certification through the International Association of Directors of Law Enforcement Standards and Training.